Abstract

The role of phrases in learning Turkish is very important. In addition to learning words separately in the process of learning a language, learning to use them in context, that is, in phrases, helps to understand the true meaning of the language and use it correctly. A phrase is a unit of language formed by the joint use of several words, which means a specific meaning, which is different from the separate meaning of words. That is why phrases play an important role in language learning.

Keywords: Phrase language, Turkish language, grammatical rules, texts, language, communication, thought 1, meaning.

Introduction

Through the phrase, the language learner not only learns new words, but also realizes how they relate to each other, in what contexts they are used. This serves to learn the language more deeply and more efficiently. The language learned using the phrase is not only grammatically correct, but also logically correct, since the phrases retain the natural flow of the language. There are many phrases in Turkish that are widely used in everyday life, literature, formal and informal communication. For example, while the phrase "gözünü açmak" "literally means" to open one's eyes", it is actually used to mean "to pay attention", "to pay attention". Thus, phrases teach not only the lexical, but also cultural and contextual aspects of the language. In the process of phrase learning, there are several methods for language learners. One of them is reading texts and extracting phrases from them. The study of phrases through texts shows the real-life use of language. Exercises and dialogues that include phrases are also effective tools in learning the language. These techniques allow language learners to memorize phrases and use them in speech.[1]

Expressions in Turkish often depend on a cultural context, and in order to properly understand them, it is necessary to study Turkish culture and traditions as well. For example, the phrase " elini eteğini çekmek "literally means" to pull the hand and foot", but it is used to mean" to stop something", " not to participate". Phrases like this will help the language learner understand not only the language, but also the way of thinking of the Turkish people. Phrase learning is one of the factors that make language lively and natural. Learning words separately can lead to mechanically remembering a language, but the process of learning a language using phrases becomes more interesting and effective. The language learned through the phrase acquires originality, since each phrase has its own historical, cultural and linguistic roots.[2]

Expressions in Turkish are used in many areas. In literature, for example, they increase figurativeness, and in speech they ensure the richness of expression. Phrases also enrich the stylistic aspects of the language, since with them the way of speaking becomes original and impressive. This is a great advantage for language learners. When learning a phrase, language learners are advised to find phrases and learn them in different manifestations of the language, that is, in official documents, in everyday conversations, in literary works. Through this, they can see how phrases are used in different contexts. At the same time, language learners should try to use phrases in their speech, since it will be more effective to master the language through practice.[3]

The role of dictionaries for language learners in the process of phrase learning is also great. With the help of dictionaries containing phrases in Turkish, it becomes easier to understand phrases in the right sense and apply them in speech. Various internet resources, video tutorials, and interactive exercises also help with phrase learning. Phrase learning is important not only for the language learner, but also for language learners. Teachers can increase students ' interest in language by incorporating phrases into the course process, ensuring that they acquire language more efficiently. This makes the language learning process more interactive and interesting. Learning phrases in Turkish prepares language learners not only to better understand the language, but also to communicate freely and fluently in Turkish. Through the expression, the language learner is able to express his opinion more clearly and impressively, which makes the communication process more efficient.[4]

Conclusion:

In conclusion, phrases are very important in learning Turkish. They reveal the true meaning of language, make language lively and natural, teach cultural and linguistic aspects. Learning a phrase will help you master the language more deeply and more efficiently. Therefore, each language learner should pay special attention to phrases. This not only makes learning the language easier, but also makes the language more interesting and meaningful.
